NORTHERN COLLEGE OF HOMEOPATHIC MEDICINE

“A jaunt through the history of bacteria, from 4 billion years ago to the present.

I'll look at the 'family relationships' of some bacteria - for example Neisseria includes not only Medorrhinum, but also a meningococcal bacterium which might be useful if the case looked like a skewed Medorrhinum case - one with more headaches than sexual symptoms etc.

My information is not just homeopathic, but also clinical. I am interested in the many different ways of case-taking: we should be able to make a good prescription with the information we have, whether it is simple observation, a Kentian-type case, one taken using Facial Analysis, or using the Bombay method, and even deeper, in tracking the Source Language of the case. I'll show how we can track a bacterial remedy [nosode] using these different methods.

I have found these questions fascinating, as they are the history of the human race - and our history is ever evolving of course. I still have more questions than answers. And I have a passion for all the minutiae of life, whether it be bugs or bacteria!
